Restrictions:

CAYR authors retain copyright of their original material but grant an exclusive license to CAYR to publish the work and communicate it to the public. They are free to archive their versions of pre-print and post-print as open access on an institutional repository, but not the published version (i.e. the CAYR edited, proofread, typeset and designed version that is published in hard copy and online). CAYR holds copyright of their contribution to that version, and an exclusive right to subsequently publish the work in hard copy or online publications such as collections.

CAYR allows archiving of the published version but only as a secure (restricted) pdf on the author's institutional repository and only after the author has requested permission to archive that version. The archiving of this version must include:

- acknowledgment that permission was received to archive the published version;
- the origin of the material, including volume, edition and date of the Journal of Applied Youth Studies from which the paper has been sourced; and
- a notice that copyright of the editing of the published version (and therefore interests in the entire pdf version) is held by the Centre for Applied Youth Research Inc.
